COMMUNITY'S PUBLIC PRIDE

By Gabrielle Warren

As a public school that's only in its 39th year, it's surprising to see how much progress the school has made in the past year. The school's principal credits the strong support of the community and the students themselves for the school's success.

The school's principal believes that the school's success is due to the strong support of the community and the students themselves. "We have a strong community that is very supportive of the school," the principal says. "And the students themselves are very committed to their education."
